B. Briefly, explain the reasons behind the above table. You may need to elaborate on cases that relate to substantial/non-substantial contributions. For example, you can mention substantial contributions to tasks, group management, stepping to rescue tasks, etc. Alternatively, you can refer to any issues that made you think that a specific member has zero (0) contributions or non-substantially contributed to the coursework.

Member 1:	As a team member, I have done all the tasks allocated to me. As the Scrum Master of our team. I checked everyone's task completion and guided them. I also edited the final report file using Latex.
Member 2:	As a student, I finish all of the coursework tasks that are allocated to me.  As a deputy, I am responsible for the extra work below:  1. Preparing examples of the tasks for every meeting to explain tasks for members in detail.  2. Designing the tasks and people allocation every week.  3. Booking the meeting room one time every week in the library.
Member 3:	Organised by the Scrum Master and Deputy, I met and discussed with the group members and divided up the work to complete our project.
Member 4:	As a team member, I have completed all the tasks that have been distributed fairly among us and I have also attended all the group meetings.
Member 5:	As a team member, I attended all group meetings and finished all tasks which were allocated to me on time. I also built a demonstration program of the interactive part as a reference for video recording.
Member 6:	As a member of the team, I completed every task that I was allocated to, and attended every group meeting to discuss the project.
Member 7:	I proposed a practical project and explained how to implement it, completed every task that I was assigned to, took part in every meeting, provided suggestions to our project and acted as an AI coach in our video recording.
Member 8:	I attended all meetings and provided feedback on people's drafts, while also correcting grammar on many pieces. I also completed all tasks I was allocated and did some pieces of work independently.

C. The form SHOULD be signed by ALL members. In the case of an absence of one member, please indicate the reasons.
